Negative PCRFB = Positive Savings:

You’ve received your most recent statement and see a negative PCRFB charge as a credit. But what does that mean?

The Power Cost Recovery Factor (PCRFB) is a mechanism that trues up power costs. Put simply, when you see a negative PCRFB, it means wholesale electricity prices are lower than budgeted and power cost savings are passed on to you as a credit on your bill.

Conversely, when prices are higher than budgeted, the PCRFB will be a positive number, adding to the base rate. The volatility of the natural gas market is the reason for fluctuating power costs; they are interdependent. 800796050

Since February wholesale power costs were lower than budgeted, a negative PCRFB of 1 cent/kWh was credited back to members on March billing statements. At Tri-County Electric Cooperative, we are hopeful that our members will see more savings with the negative PCRFB in the future.
